when viewed in side elevation, include a horizontal base, a front leg which extends upwardly and outwardly from one end of said base, an upper member which inclines slightly downwardly and extends rearwardly from the upper end of the front leg, and a sloping upwardly extending back portion extending from the other end of the upper member and inclining upwardly and rearwardly therefrom. A rear leg extends upwardly and outwardly from the other end of the base and then turns inwardly and engages the back portion just above the junction of the upper member with the back portion.

A plurality of spaced and parallel elongated members of rectangular cross section are situated upon the upper members and span the upper members extending beyond the upper members.

A pair of rectangular cross sectioned members are situated in spaced and parallel relationship spanning the upwardly and outwardly extending back members and extend beyond these back members but terminate inboard of the ends of the seat members.

Dear Sirs:

Re: Industrial Design: 48231

Proprietor: JOHN GORDON INTERIORS LTD.

Subject: BENCH WITH BACK

You are hereby notified that this design has been registered prior to the completion of the six month priority period provided by Section 29 of the Industrial Design Act. If in the remaining portion of the Priority period (until September 28, 1981) another application is submitted with the same design as herein registered and with an earlier effective filing date than was held in the application for this registration, then such application will be registered.

The proprietor named herein will be notified if such an application is received.

Yours truly,

(Mrs.) J. Parker,
Head, Industrial Design Unit.
